	Page FAQ
		WTK v	/1 supply m	iint

On this page we'll have a look at the original WTK token, or more specifically the minting of new tokens from the early days before it was tradeable and all the way up to the Bitmart hack on December 4 2021. In column A you will find the transaction hash for each mint with the link leading you straight to that transaction on Etherscan. While most columns are pretty self explanatory, I can add that column F (To) shows the wallet receiving the mint, but as you can confirm in the txn hash from the first column this does not mean it was the wallet executing the transaction. All mints were executed by an old team wallet labelled "WADZ deployer" within this document. The label column gives a name and direct link to the same wallet as shown in column F where I deemed it relevant. The header of this page I also clickable to bring up the full set of mints directly on Etherscan. Don't forget to also check the FAQ.

Initially, things doesn't look so bad at a glance. The promised supply of 250m was never even reached but we can see some massive supply control early through the holdings of WTK team 07 (BAYC). The outflow from this team wallet didn't start until August of 2021, followed by big dilution of the circulating supply through minting. Prior to the outflow starting from WTK team 07 (BAYC), the estimated circulation would have been just above 10m WTK, but just 4 months later this number reached 190m.

Depending on assumed use. Tokens identified as dead supply or for exchange services has their price set to 0 as they were definitely not sold. Seed round participants are assumed to have paid 0.03 cents per token, which was the price set for the original WADZ token sale that got cancelled. Do note that this could be inaccurate and not all seed participants are confirmed, but some assumed to be unaffiliated with the team based on wallet activity. For team supply, the launch price of 0.07 was used to determine the value.
Are these transactions all illegal?  No. Everything prior to launch is perfectly fine, perhaps with some questionable distribution. The supply was always supposed to be 250m and by the time the Bitmart hack happened, less than 200m WTK had been minted. The supply going to The Black Hole in September and October of 2021 especially is very noteworthy, but not necessarily indicating foul play.
Anything else?
I'm glad you asked! One fun fact - one of the seed round buyers have actually held through all the ups and downs and is currently sporting a multi million WCO bag on W-chain.

		1	NTK v2 BSC	supply mint

This is a summary of all mint and burn transactions for the WTK v2 token on BSC after Wadzpay went from a pure Ethereum token to a cross-chain venture. You can find direct links to each transaction hash on bscscan in column A. Column G (Receiver label) contain direct links to the wallets listed in column D (column C in the case of burns) and are color coded. Red for confirmable WTK team wallets, purple for the two wallets operating the token and bridge on Polygon further down the timeline, blue for wallets with the main purpose of receiving stolen supply from the Polygon hack and orange for confirmable WCO team wallets. Column H (Trigger wallet) shows the wallet executing each mint/burn transaction. The header links to a full overview of all mints directly on bscscan.

Probably the first thing you'll notice here is the inclusion of both Polygon hacker wallets in the list, plus a number of to-be hacker wallets. As this happened months before the Polygon hack started, it shows us the hackers direct involvment in the team, receiving supply directly minted using the WTK Main Supply (v2) wallet. Further down you will also see burns from hacker wallets, these also being triggered not from the hacker wallets themselves, but again WTK Main Supply (v2). This shows us that the number one team wallet of the WTK era was fully aware of what was happening already in late Q1 2023, and it even re-minted the burnt tokens to itself before the contract was renounced.

What am I looking at here?
An overview of all outgoing transactions from the main supply wallet from the day the team minted an additional 750m WTK on each chain up until the launch of WCO. At this point the bridges come into play and the patterns become more complex with cross chain movements.
Okay, I don't get it. What's so interesting about it?
We continue establishing the patterns of both team wallets and exchange deposits while also getting our first look of direct team involvment by both hacker wallets used to control the Polygon token and bridge. A handful of hacker wallets also comes into play interacting with the main team holdings, and all this happening months before the Polygon hack was initiated.
Why did you remove transactions? That's cheating!
Nope. The removed txn's actually lowers the outflow (meaning a better look for the team statistics wise). The removed transactions had a legitimate usecase to balance exchange supply and airdrop holders so those should not be included in the outflow we are looking at here.
A (b ( (b   1   10
Are these transactions all illegal?
Still probably not. But at this point we start seeing the hacker transaction pattern emerge from the main supply wallet in December 2022. The regular outflow from team wallets that had been ongoing essentially since the launch of WTK v1 comes to an abrupt stop on January 12 2023.
Coincidentally this is also the day where the Polygon hack begins.
What if you just made up the bridge destinations?
The beauty of the blockchain is that you can easily verify	Etherscan
this yourself. Simply click the link of the transaction hash for	Bscscan a bridge transaction in column A. Scroll down to More details and press "+ Click to show more", then simply find	XDCscan the button saying "Decode Input Data" below the grey box.  This will show you the destination chain (1 for BSC, 3 for Ethereum and 51 for XDC) and the destination address on the newAddress line. Copy the address and paste it into the explorer of the destination blockchain and you have verified the receiver.

BACK HOME NEXT Page FAQ WTK Polygon bridge outflow

The big event, this page includes all transactions made to bridge WTK minted on Polygon in order to steal real supply from the official bridge contracts on BSC and XDC. Column A holds the original transaction hash on Polygon used to initiate the theft. Unlike past pages, these are not direct links simply due to the sheer amount of them. I might convert the column to links later on, but for now you will have to copy and paste them into polygonscan manually if needed. Column M shows the destination of the bridge transaction on the official chains and for instructions on how to confirm this yourself, please check the page FAQ. Columns N through P shows wallets where the destination wallet forwarded the receied supply. Color coding is red for team wallets, blue for straight hacker wallets, purple for the two hacker wallets on the Polygon blockchain, green for secondary bridge transactions, yellow for burns and gray for unknown wallets.

As this page only contain illegal transactions, it's probably the easiest one to see the patterns here. While we have close to 200 hacker wallets involved, we also see most of the team wallets as receivers of stolen supply. If receiving stolen tokens directly wasn't bad enough, every single one of the 199 hacker wallet were either directly (105) or indirectly (94) funded from one of the WTK team wallets and 170 of the hacker wallets used either a WTK team or WCO team exchange deposit at least once.

Scroll down a little bit to the "More details" section and press "Click to show more". The input data box may look alien, but just a quick tap on "Decode input data" and you'll have all information you will need. The newAddress row contains the receiving wallet while blockchain will give you what chain it was sent to. BSC = 1, ETH = 3, XDC = 51. 	Airdropped ha	acker wallets	6

Not very complex and largely irrelevant, this table shows the hacker wallets included in the WCO airdrop. Team wallets and exchange deposits not included, even if several of those were holding stolen supply and receiving airdrops for the stolen supply. The link in the Label column will bring you directly to the relevant blockchain explorer and show the WCO holdings of each wallet.

As all hacker wallets generally forwarded the received stolen supply to Bitrue shortly after receiving it, I frankly didn't expect this many to be eligible. Most of these holdings are the result of the hacker sending supply to the wrong chain though, and in most cases it appears to have never been discovered. While this data is largely irrelevant as the airdropped token is now essentially worthless, it does show how little effort was made by the team in their "investigation". No hacker wallet still holdin WTK was excluded from the airdrop, none was blacklisted and what little WCO the hacker wallets ended up moving was ironically also used by the WCO team later on.
